DAUGHTER OF DESTINY

CHAPTER XIX.

"It's so nice of you to bother to take me home, Mr. Macias," Devona said, trying hard to ignore the subtle possessiveness in his smile, his manner. "I'm really terribly tired to-night."

"No bother at all," His dark eyes laughed at her elaborate pretences a little. "I suppose you want to put those things in the safe?" He nodded at the little bundle in her hand—the handsome mantilla, the locket and fan.

"Yes—please. I'm sure they will be safer there than in my dressing room."

With quick, deft fingers, he turned the dial, opened the heavy steel door, reached for the pile of treasures Devona had laid on his desk.

The safe, she noticed without really intending to, was full of little square white boxes. And bundles of currency rolled together with elastic bands. Idly, she wondered how much money was tucked away in there, and why he preferred to keep it there instead of in a bank. Probably, Macias was just money-lover enough to enjoy having his wealth where he could count it, admire it, touch it with those long, brown fingers.

She was still staring when Macias turned toward her. Flushing a little under the swift, hard look he gave her, the almost insulting vigor with which he slammed the safe shut, she faced him across a sudden, throbbing little silence.

Finally he said, quietly but with unmistakable warning. "No one but me—and now you—knows where that safe is hidden."

"Oh—really?"

"The man who installed it is dead," he went on. "I've never showed it to any one else. Understand?"

"Perfectly." She tried to smile away the implication. "I'll keep your secret."

"Yes—you will." But there was no smile with it.

And Devona was suddenly aware that she had been given a glimpse of some secret vulnerability in this hard, ruthless man. He had some secret—some guilty secret. One that he was deliberately revealing to her—gradually. She would learn the whole of it, in time.

Macias calmly picked up his expensive, pearl-gray homberg. "Shall we go now?"

Devona nodded. "Yes, please," and started to open the door.

out of the drive, out of sight. Underfoot, she felt the soft luxury of rich Oriental rugs. "Louis Quatorze" was emblazoned on a heraldic shield ornamenting the doorway, embroidered into the soft drapery. This, she realized as Macias rang for the elevator, was where he lived.

Still numb, afraid to go on, and still more afraid to stop, she stepped into the gold and velvet elevator cage. A moment later, Macias' dark-skinned house-boy was bowing them into an elaborately furnished living room. At first, Devona saw only deep-cushioned, elaborately carved furniture, heavy ches a that might have been heirlooms preserved in some rich Spanish nobleman's castle, thick carpets, dozens of massively framed oil paintings. The whole scene heavy with gold and red velvet—and obviously costly.

Then she noticed the little table set before the fireplace—a table set for—TWO!

"How—nice," she murmured, managed to move calmly toward the fire, to pretend to warm her numbed fingers.

"How delicious," she said a little later as the well-trained houseboy served very excellent lobster under glass and very old champagne.

Delicious, stimulating, the food and wine lent her courage—a courage she realized only too well of which she'd have great need if he carried this through without blundering.

Because, of course, the excellent little supper, the warming fire, the quiet intimacy of this elegant room were only strains of the overture before the curtain went up on the main action.

Her eyes wandered over the handsome grand piano, the massive lava, vases that were huge, costly. Everything the biggest, the most that money could buy. Symbols of Macias' power to buy and buy and buy.

She came back to the situation with a jolt. And she was next on his shopping list!

"Well, and do you like it?" he asked, and the question told her he had missed none of her silent study of his room.

"It's very—elaborate," she said honestly. "The effect is—overwhelming. So many priceless, beautiful things—"

Then, to avoid that dark-eyed scrutiny, she rose suddenly, crossed to the big window behind her. Below, Los Angeles and its constellation of satellite cities spread a carpet of shimmering lights as far as she could see. "And your view, too. It's simply—"

Macias had followed her, stood now just behind her shoulder. "You appreciate beautiful things, don't you?"

Devona shrugged. "I—enjoy them. And then, because talking seemed safer than silences, 'My father taught me, really. If it hadn't been for his tremendous interest in the art centre we travelled through. In the fine, beautiful things that different civilizations had created, I probably wouldn't have been so interested."

"That's probably what makes you a different—and very charming person."

"Thank you," and, to distract his attention, "Tell me about your pictures."

"Oh—how—startling!"

"Clever, isn't it?" Macias beamed proudly. "I invented this one myself."

"Yes—very clever," and she couldn't help seeing that this hiding place, too, was piled with square boxes, with rolls of currency. Why was he showing her all this? Why was he flaunting his enormous rolls of money, his strange devices for hiding them?

As if in answer, he drew the painting back into place, turned toward her quietly.

"I'm glad you like it, turned," he said, "because I want you to stay."

A liveried doorman opened the door and helped her out.

"Might as well," Macias nodded curtly, led the way into the softly lighted foyer.

"Yes, sir."

Behind her, Devona heard the soft purr of the engine as the car slid

Water Cools Milk Much Faster Than Air

Milk should be cooled to 50 degrees F., or lower, immediately after it is drawn in order to prevent bacterial growth and subsequent spoilage. At the same time, while the cooling of milk is very important it cannot take the place of clean milking, but milk cooled without delay will keep sweet many hours longer than will another portion of the same milk, the cooling of which has been delayed for an hour or two. When milk must be shipped long distances without adequate protection during warm weather, immediate cooling may make all the difference of its being accepted or rejected at the plant.

The speed at which milk can be cooled depends upon the rate at which the heat in the milk is passed on to something else which will absorb it. Some materials absorb heat much more rapidly than others. Air absorbs heat very slowly.

Consequently, if a can of warm milk is placed in a refrigerator room where the air temperature is at freezing point, it will be about 12 hours before the temperature of the milk has fallen to 50 degrees F. This explains, states the War-time Production Series Pamphlet of the Agricultural Supplies Board, No. 58, on "Cooling Milk on the Farm," why attempts to cool milk in winter by setting the cans in a snow-bank or exposing them to outdoor temperature so often lead to trouble.

Water absorbs heat much more rapidly and will cool milk more than 30 times faster than air. As milk must give up its heat to the surrounding water, the larger the volume of water and the lower its temperature, the more quickly the milk will be cooled. Cooling is more rapid when either the milk or water or both are kept in motion. In stirring milk there is a risk of adding bacteria if the stirring rods are not thoroughly washed and sterilized; hence stirring the water is the better method. The many methods available for cooling milk are discussed in detail in the bulletin which may be obtained by writing to Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Seemed Strange

A male nurse in a mental hospital noticed a patient with his ear close to the wall, listening intently. The patient held up a finger as a warning for him to be very quiet, then beckoned him over and said: "You listen here."

The nurse put his ear to the wall and listened for some time, then turned to the patient and said: "I can't hear anything."

"No," said the patient, "and it's been like that all day."

Shows Progress

When the Women's Auxiliary Air Force was formed it took two or three women to fill the place of one man, Lady Sinclair, wife of the air minister, said in an address in London. "Now it has been realized that it takes only one woman to replace a man," which, she added, "shows how the country is progressing."

Flag Made In Conquered Poland Is Dedicated To Victory

A romantic tale of the smuggling out of Poland of a battle flag which finally was presented to a Polish flying squadron in Scotland July 16 was told by an official at the Polish consulate at Ottawa.

"Some of the drama and color of this strange war is bound up in the 18 months of travel that flag made before it got to Scotland," he said.

"At the beginning of the war a Polish aviator who had escaped from his country to France was stationed at Lyon. He managed to get word to a Polish woman living in his native town in Russian-occupied Poland asking her to embroider a special flag for the Polish fliers in exile. He sent the design to her, saying the 'colors' would bring the Polish pilots' benediction and victory."

The design showed the image of Saint Mary of Ostabramia of the cathedral of Vilno, with the lilies of the crown of the Royal Polish Dynasty of Jagellons. This was the emblem under which Poland, Lithuania and Ruthenia were united and the Lithuanian Jagellon family furnished several remarkable sovereigns for Poland and Hungary.

On the other side of the flag were the emblems of the different units of the Polish Air Force and the words "God, Honor, Country."

Once the flag was embroidered it had to be sent from Poland to Lyon for presentation. After completion it was secretly dedicated in a religious ceremony before the image of the Virgin Mary in one of Poland's cathedrals.

In spite of Soviet and German vigilance the flag was smuggled across the frontiers, through Germany itself, and into Belgium.

Then the Nazis invaded the Low countries. The flag disappeared. After a thousand complications it was smuggled out of occupied Belgium and finally reached Britain.

Once the flag was smuggled into Britain and Polish officials it was presented to the Polish aviators and dedicated to victory.

"It is a story worthy of the age of chivalry," the Polish consulate official said.

Sometimes Uses Police Car

When in Harry Prime Minister Churchill Wastes No Time

According to "London Calling" sometimes, when in a hurry, the Prime Minister now goes about London by police car. A colleague had the rare pleasure of seeing him flash past one day. "On top of the car," he says, "was a contraption that made a buzzing noise the whole time. The driver looked like a speed cop."

In the back seat Churchill, his cigar, profile well forward, and his secretary, clutching her bag in terror. . .

WHEN TOO TIRED FOR FUN NERVES MAY BE TO BLAME

Her Energy Used Up In Worry

Too tired—no matter what gay plans are afoot. But why—if she's not ill? "Nerves" perhaps.

If you feel exhausted all the time but have nothing organically wrong with you, you're probably the high-strung type, letting worry eat up all your energy.

And yet, just because you are high-strung, you could be one of the most charming and vital people if you would turn those inward energies outward.

How to do it? Try to understand what's making you nervous. Is there some problem you've tried to ignore?

An unvoiced problem, you know, can be as alive and destructive as a disease germ. The thing to do is to force it to the surface. Out in the open it can be driven away.

But ignore it, grow still more tired and irritable, and you'll drive away friends and family instead. You'll be right on the road to a nervous breakdown.

Our 32-page booklet explains causes of "nerves" and "nervous" symptoms such as indigestion, insomnia. Describes a physical and mental program to overcome them. Gives right diet, body care for sound nerves, vitality.

Send 15c in coins for your copy of "Overcoming Nerves and Every-Day Health Problems" to Home Service Dept., Winnipeg Newspaper Union, 175 McDermot Ave. E., Winnipeg, Man.

Vitamins For Soldiers

Use Would Keep Eyesight In Better Condition

Proper supplies of vitamin in the soldier's diet will not only maintain his general health but may save his life in action by keeping his eyesight in good condition. It was stated in documents tabled for a parliamentary sub-committee on war expenditures.

Brig. R. M. Gossline, director of army medical service, gave the committee copies of circular letters sent to all district medical officers.

Officers were reminded that if a person does not receive an adequate supply of vitamin C, resistance against disease was lowered. A moderate lack of vitamin C was probably a factor in the development of some mouth conditions, such as trench mouth.

Raw cabbage and raw turnips are excellent sources of vitamin C, but if the cooking is prolonged, over 50 per cent of the vitamin originally present is lost. Potatoes contained a small amount of vitamin C.

Tomatoes were considered most important as a source of vitamin C. For the best level of health, 5,000 to 6,000 units daily of vitamin A are required. . . . And the ordinary hospital diet of the Canadian army furnishes 6,635 units daily.
